Engaging Parents as Meaningful Partners in the Special Education Process and the Education of Their Child

Meaningful engagement of parents and family members in a child's special education program is an essential factor to improve results for students with disabilities. Parents need an understanding of the special education process and their rights within this process. They also need to understand what is expected of their child and how they can meaningfully participate in the development of their child's Individualized Education Program (IEP). Resources and professional development include:

Special Education Parent Centers

Parental Involvement (Parent Surveys)

Each year, a representative sample of school districts send a Parent Survey to parents with a child receiving special education services. The survey measures the percent of these parents who report that the school facilitated parent involvement as a means of improving services and results for children with disabilities. Approximately 50,000 surveys, in ten languages, are distributed annually. Surveys can be completed by writing on a hard copy, completing a telephone interview, or on-line.

Completed surveys are sent directly to a NYSED vendor and are not seen by school district personnel. School districts receive a summary of the results of the surveys completed by parents from their school districts. Parents are strongly encouraged to complete these surveys if requested to do so by their school district. For more information see

Youth Advisory Panel

Members of NYSED's Youth Advisory Panel met in May, to share their experiences and thoughts related to self-advocacy and self-determination. Members discussed both supports and challenges to developing these essential skills, as well as steps schools could take to promote self-advocacy and self-determination.

This was the final meeting of the current members of the Youth Advisory Panel whose two-year terms are coming to an end. NYSED is seeking nominations for new members. The panel, established in 2014, advises the Office of Special Education on proposed policies related to the education of students with disabilities. Additional information and the nomination form regarding the Youth Advisory Panel can be found at <http://www.p12.nysed.gov/specialed/youthpanel/home.html>.
